Second Playoff Round

Steiner Stadium welcomes you back to a new day of Fights. I'm Dorian Michaels and THIS.. is KMech Radio.

After an exhausting run of events yesterday, Captain Deadmeat and his crew has had little sleep and even less time to plan for today's game. They've gotten hammered the last two times they set foot on the sands of the stadium floor, but here they are. The underdogs, trying to salvage their honor, and their team spirit. Give it up, people, for Team Deadmeat!!

*cheers and whistling can be heard in the background*

For this round of action, Captain Deadmeat will be piloting a Hollander II while his team have taken an eclectic mix of mechs. Wildcard looks especially impressive in the Masakari while Tovaar has taken on a more sinister look with the Deimos. Nightmare, as their ball, has remained with her Mech of choice, the Raven.

There's a light fog out this morning. Other than that, it's pretty clear. It seems that the referees are taking no chances at missing any violations in this match. Several of the newer sensors placed around the arena have been activated as well as at least two of the vidcams placed on the top of the arches. These last two have a 360 degree view of the entire enclosure and have such a tight view, the referees could probably see a fly on the plasglass of individual cockpits if they tighten the focus enough.

Coming out of the opposite gates is a group notorious for their impressive displays of weaponry. Such cunning that has been cultivated from the furthest reaches of the Galactic Ring in eradicating pirates and mercenaries from all over the circuit. Please, give it up for the newest arrival, and contender for the MechBowl Trophy... Team Sauron! Captain Sauron himself is a victor of many single combats and is well liked and respected amongst the players of this competition.

His team is known only by their callsigns, as is the norm for all MechBowl players. Following behind the Captain's Templar is Diablo, also in a Templar. Airioin and Shadowheart, looking rather fierce in an Arctic Wolf and Raven respectively. It seems the Raven is a popular machine for this game. We'll see who pilots theirs the best.

We'd like to take this moment to remind the listeners out there that Mechbowl IS a dangerous sport and none of the action described here today should ever be tried at home. Steiner stadium would also like to remind the fans that there is a Meet the Mech day each week during the season where people can come down to watch the practice runs through each scenario and meet their favorite Warrior and learn about the mechs they drive.

And on that note, there goes the security field. The large screens are lit up to show what is obscured by the fog in the arena so even the audience can see the action clearly. There it is, flares have just gone off. Ladies and Gentlemen, the Third official Mechbowl game is underway!

Despite having little or no rest, Team Deadmeat looks to be doing okay. Moving carefully, yet with a purpose, each mech is narrowing the gap between themselves and their target. Yes, I can see the first salvos flying from here. Most of them are harmlessly hitting the walls or being deflected by the force shield above the arena. For safety's sake the energy field has been strengthened so that nothing will harm the spectators.

And we're at the one minute mark and it looks like Nightmare's in trouble. Ouch. Captain Sauron just scored a hit that sent his opponent's escape pod arching into the air through the field. As if in retaliation Wildcard has just sent Airion to the showers with a little weapons work of his own.

Don't worry about the Warriors themselves, they'll be back out in the game as soon as they saddle up once more. In the meantime, the remaining warriors have settled in and begun to settle in and the shots are getting more accurate.

And now, breaking news from the Online Central Newsfeed.

“Thank you Darien. This just in. A mysterious masked apparition was seen sneaking into the Kohana stables late two nights ago. In the morning, two guards and a lab technician were found dead. Unconfirmed reports say that all three had died of fright as no other reason can be found. A preliminary report is being readied and will be given to the press after the game. Back to you..

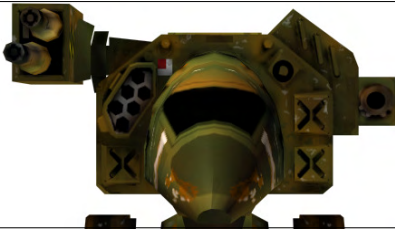

And we're getting up to the finishing 4 minutes of the game and the grounds have been littered with blasted armor, leaking coolant and unidentifiable debris. Even the trees that were once standing in the four corners have been trampled into nothingness. Thankfully, these will be replaced after the arena is clear and the next teams arrive on the playing field...

Oh that's going to leave a very large dent in the sand! Captain Deadmeat has just shown Shadowheart what it's like to be a soccer ball as his escape pod rockets to safety. Flashy and very decisive.

Just a moment. All play has stopped at the moment, one of the referees has tagged a warrior.. yes.. warrior Diablo has been ejected from the game with less than a minute to go! This is a first, we'll have more information on that incident after the game when there's more time. As it is the game is tied to 1 each, it's anyone's game at this point. Both teams are protecting their designated football mech with enough firepower to stop a war. Which, in essence, they can.

If someone doesn't do something soon this game's going into overtime and.. wait.. There it goes! Sauron just sealed the fate of team Deadmeat by sending Nightmare's pod out of the combat zone with 9:41 left on the clock. And, it's official, Team Deadmeat is officially eliminated from the bowl games.

For a final replay of the game, please log into the datagrid here at Steiner Stadium... Have a nice day and we'll be back later on today for the next Bowl Game of the season.
